He talks about the BBC/Discovery television series he has written and hosted, "The Buried Mirror," and the book drawn from the material. He tells how the project originated nearly ten years ago, and about the difficulty of finding funding. He explains the meaning of the title, and talks about the importance of culture to the Americas. He talks about he got started writing, about his discipline as a writer, and how he gets his ideas (from dreams) and how they take shape. He talks about his service as Mexican Ambassador to France, and about the relations between Mexico and France, and the United States. He talks about how he was excluded from the U. S. by the McCarran Act, and about the danger of the resurgence of the Right in the U. S. He tells why the idea of nationalist writing is a thing of the past, and talks about the trilogy he is in the process of completing.
